BIOGRAPHY Prof. Moshe Frenkel

Prof. Moshe Frenkel is a clinical associate professor at the University of Texas and founder of the Integrative Medicine Clinic at MD Anderson Cancer Center. Board-certified in Family Medicine, he earned his medical degree from Tel Aviv University and completed his residency in New York. He has held key roles at MD Anderson, the University of Texas Medical Branch, and leading medical institutions in Israel. Since 2019, he has directed the Integrative Oncology Service at RAMBAM Medical Center. Prof. Frenkel has published over 100 peer-reviewed papers, contributed to major oncology textbooks, and led research on integrating complementary medicine into cancer care. A sought-after international speaker and educator, he received the 2024 SIO Fellow Award for his contributions to integrative oncology. He remains actively involved in research and clinical practice, advancing patient-centred integrative care worldwide. He currently leads the SIO Special Interest Group on Research in Homeopathy in Cancer Care.
